“ Hesper, When I was going through a difficult time last year, a dear friend said to me that grief was the price we paid for love. At the time, I was angered by her comments and felt that she was diminishing how I felt. As time passed and I thought more about her words, I realized how true her comments had become. The greater the love and connection, the greater the grief. It was evident in every decision you made in your life how very much you loved Roger and how very deeply he loved you. Very few people find that kind of love even though most search a lifetime for it. May you find some comfort in the decades that you spent together, madly in love. This is going to be a very difficult road to walk down, but you are not alone. You are surrounded by countless friends and a very strong, loving family. I'm here, honored to be your friend, and willing to do whatever I can to help. All my love, Julie Bates
